The excitement was very clear at the Maudsley Symposium which was well attended by many stakeholders including faculty, residents, program administrators and undergraduate medical students. The Maudsley family was very impressed with the level of research that is being conducted to advance medical education at Queen's. Many thanks to all of you who contributed to the event and shared your knowledge and expertise.

Have you see these at the hospitals and on campus?

You'll notice faculty, staff and others sporting these new buttons if they've attended CBME Central, the Maudsley Symposium or any other Faculty Development session to prepare for CBME. The red buttons are being worn by our CBME
'experts' including Educational Consultants, CBME Executive Team, Program Directors & CBME Leads—and anyone else who'd like to share their expertise in CBME! They were created to help incoming residents and faculty identify front-line people to whom they can address any questions. You can get yours at CBME Central or by contacting any member of the CBME team.

Lastly, if you haven't done so already, check out the latest Dean on Campus blog for this week, highlighting CBME!
